Natalya Shisman remembers the image of her mother, a respected engineer in Ukraine, sleeping on a park bench in Italy.

The woman who held multiple degrees and lived in the northeastern city of Kharkiv was now homeless, negotiating with street criminals for protection throughout the night. In a nearby church, her two daughters slept safely.

United States Will Welcome Up to 100,000 Ukrainian Refugees

With European nations under stress from three million new refugees, the United States said it would substantially increase admissions of people fleeing Russia's invasion.

BRUSSELS — Bowing to domestic and international pressure, President Biden said on Thursday the United States would accept up to 100,000 refugees fleeing Ukraine and donate $1 billion to help European countries facing a humanitarian crisis not seen on the continent since the end of World War II.

The announcement came as countries scrambling to house and provide services to millions of Ukrainian refugees have sought assistance from the United States, which is already absorbing thousands of people evacuated from Afghanistan.

"This is not something that Poland or Romania or Germany should carry on their own," Mr. Biden said during a news briefing in Brussels. "This is an international responsibility."

The war in Ukraine has displaced millions of people in a matter of weeks as Russian forces bombard cities and towns, leaving much of the country without power, heat and water. Mr. Biden's announcement significantly increases the role of the United States in trying to mitigate the crisis.
